RDA – a tool for everything?

Conclusion

- Supporting institutions in their daily work with RDA, e.g. problem-solving
- Working groups for special materials with partners from different cultural sectors
- Participation in the Development of RDA (e.g. restructuring of the RDA Toolkit)
- Building up an organisational infrastructure for all institutions providing cultural heritage
- Openness, Acceptance and Flexibility

RDA can be a basic standard not in form of a takeover but as a standard which is

- Based on principles
- Format-independent
- International
- Linked to other standards
- Applicable in modern technical environments

RDA can be a nexus for cultural heritage and a linking point for cultural institutions.

There are so many ways to build a house!
